In April 2004, Prince Edward Island entered into the Canada-Prince Edward Island Labour Market Agreement for Persons with Disabilities. Programs and Services – Prince Edward Island

Disability Support Program

The Prince Edward Island Department of Community Services and Seniors delivers the Disability Support Program. Employment and vocational support is the component of the program that is cost-shared under this agreement, and meets one or more of the objectives of the agreement.

Refer to Appendix 1 for information regarding the Disability Support Program and the unique way in which the program helps to remove barriers to employment for persons with disabilities. Individuals with physical, intellectual, or neurological disabilities are eligible for the Disability Support Program. Individuals with a mental illness are eligible for the employment and vocational component of the Disability Support Program.

The employment and vocational component of the Disability Support Program offers supports to improve levels of work related skills for persons with disabilities by providing funding to purchase supports such as training, assessments, technical aids and assistive devices, tutors, note takers and interpreters. These supports assist in improving access to basic and post secondary education.

The Disability Support Program attempts to improve the labour market situation and independence of people with disabilities through employment related activities provided by front-line staff who specialize in the delivery of services which are provided across the province. The services include: management and coordination, supportive casework and counseling, referral, service review and follow-up. Supports and services focus on the following:

- planning transition from school to work;
- assessment, pre-employment and employment supports;
- assistance with volunteer placement opportunities; and
- assistance with specialized employment planning.

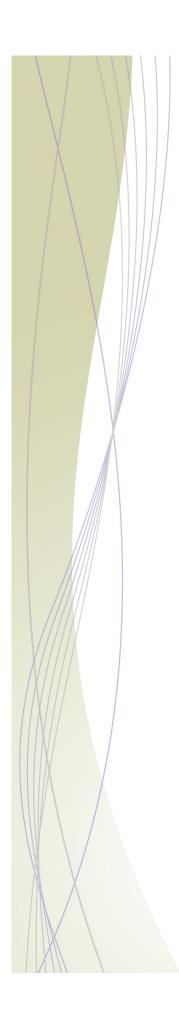

To enhance awareness of persons with disabilities within the labour market, and to strengthen their knowledge of labour market opportunities, the Disability Support Program also offers supports for job coaching and job mentoring as well as supports for self employment and entrepreneurship.

Services are offered under this agreement across Prince Edward Island to assist in building a comprehensive knowledge base through research and reporting best practices. This assists in enhancing the knowledge base, which contributes to continuous improvement of the labour market policies and programs for persons with disabilities. There is ongoing maintenance and enhancement of data collection systems to better assess program effectiveness.

PEI Disability Support Program: Why is the Disability Support Program unique in removing disincentives to employment for people with disabilities?

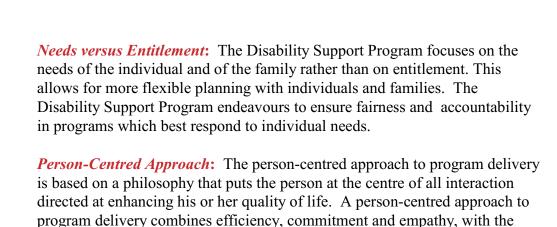

Prince Edward Island was the first jurisdiction in Canada to fully separate disability supports from income support programming. This separation effectively removed the primary disincentive that has historically prevented many individuals with disabilities from seeking long-term attachment to the labour force. People with disabilities, in particular those with more severe limitations, are often dependent on receiving disability specific financial supports for such needs as supervision or personal care. If these supports are attached to eligibility to social assistance programming, then an individual could lose their needed supports if they earned income and became ineligible for social assistance.

Prior to the Disability Support Program, social assistance was the only option available for Islanders with disabilities over the age of 18. Under income support programs such as social assistance, disability supports were lost when a specific income level was achieved and eligibility for social assistance terminated. Under the Disability Support Program, some level of financial supports can be received up to higher levels of income based on a client contribution schedule. This approach removes disincentives for people with disabilities to earn income, as they will not lose their disability supports in their entirety.

The Disability Support Program operates with an income test for adult clients. An income test looks only at adjusted net income, based on information from the most recent Notice of Assessment from Canada Revenue Agency, and does not consider individual or family assets.

The Disability Support Program is designed to assist Islanders with a qualifying disability to overcome barriers and to attain a satisfactory quality of life. The Disability Support Program is a social program with a financial component. The program offers support planning assistance to help develop a plan of action and to help determine supports that are necessary.

The program may also provide referrals to other agencies where services may be obtained.

A person-centred approach means:

process.

- providing customized supports to individuals and families;
- the individual and family define the situation from their viewpoint;

individual and the family being a prominent partner in the service delivery

- the individual and family actively participate in the coordination of their support; and
- individual and family strengths and resources are reviewed.

The Disability Support Program offers enhanced supports that were never available under the previous programs. This includes things such as community access supports (support for volunteer opportunities), vehicle and home modifications, and enhanced employment supports.

When the Disability Support Program was introduced in October 2001, there was a significant increase in the number of people who were eligible to receive help over the previous program. Approximately 20 percent of the clients of the Disability Support Program were new participants in 2002. Many of them were individuals and families with lower income who did not qualify for social assistance and were not eligible for supports before the introduction of the Disability Support Program.
